environment

With modern manufacturing, comes the need for a sound commitment to the environment. At Farrell we understand the impact that our activities can have on the planet so our factory and processes not only conform to the strict guidelines set down by recognised European environmental agencies but far exceed them.

Farrell is accredited to and holds ISO 14001, further, it is certified to the FSC Chain of Custody for responsible forestry and its sourcing of timber and wooden components.

Our philosophy is quite simple and is backed up by these European standards. Reduced carbon consumption = Reduced global warming and reduce manufacturing costs.

1. Deal with direct emissions.
2. Control the behaviour of our supply chain in respect of the environment.
3. Offset carbon.
4. Design carbon out of our products in the long term.

Our ISO 14001 certification ensures that we tackle three important issues:

- Identify and control the environmental impact of our activities, products or services.
- Improve our environmental performance continually.
- Implement a systematic approach to setting environmental objectives and targets, achieving them and providing evidence that they have been achieved.

quality & performance standards

Our quality standards operate under ISO 9001, and we strive to ensure that our supply chain operates within this recognized quality standard. All our products are routinely tested by leading independent test houses to ensure that we conform to and exceed the industry standards.

Farrell operates a computerised order processing and production system, which enables the planning and tracking of all products from sales order processing through to dispatch. This ensures reliability of delivery commitments and product specification. We operate in accordance with our ISO 9001 quality control system and stringent checks are in place at all key stages of the production and delivery cycle.

Our company ethos is based on getting it right first time in all aspects of production and customer service.
