INTRODUCTION

ULIS-Employee Tracker System focus of this Tracking System is to track every possible activities related to the functionalities of an organization like tracking employee performance, calls response, time consumed, details of missed calls as well as management of team performance.

In today's emerging scenario, Employee Tracking Software is mandatory for all organizations depending on working strategies. Tracking System leads to the increment in performance and most important aspect is that In as well as Out time recorded on daily basis which minimizes the chances of any mistake related to attendance of an employee.

We give employee tracking software that is professional directional software to check and control employee activities. It improves employee productivity and prevents wasting of work time.

Employee GPS tracking is slowly, but most definitely, becoming an integral part of running a business in the twenty-first century. Today's economy is made up of thousands of small and medium-sized businesses employing relatively small workforces, meaning that organized and centralized employee monitoring systems are often impossible to implement. This is mainly due to the high costs related to running such systems and the need for custom, in-house tracking solutions that just can't be developed by businesses of this size. Employee tracking systems have traditionally been implemented with a physical timesheet, which managers painstakingly fill up and maintain by hand. Even a virtual one using spreadsheet software becomes mind-numbing at the end of the day. However, this is an important task for any manager to make sure that company workers are efficiently utilizing their time and meeting their deadlines.

BENEFITS

Managers can identify potential attendance issues

A primary reason an employer tracks attendance is to find out whether there are any issues that should be addressed. Beyond taking scheduled time off, employees' arrival, leaving and break times are also essential to ensuring work hours are not being abused.

Attendance tracking ensures employees get paid in full and on time

Employee attendance tracking is particularly useful for payroll. This ensures nonexempt employees are never over- or underpaid because exact hours are available. Employers can accurately calculate overtime pay, and if necessary, dock pay appropriately. Keeping accurate records of hours employees work also shows the work levels for different departments. Some might work harder than others and have consistent overtime. Tracking frequency and patterns can improve the decision making process of redistributing workloads.

Achieve real-time analysis of productivity to make better hiring and scheduling decisions

Since productivity depends on the availability of real-time attendance data, employers should use effective methods for collecting the information. A realistic view of productivity levels allows better hiring and scheduling in departments. A big picture analysis identifies trends that may reveal payroll savings. When these practices align with goals and objectives, the company stays on target without imbalances in hours worked.

Employers and employees can embrace working remotely

Tracking attendance with a remote clocking feature provides accountability without being restrictive. It becomes a win-win for everyone when employees can clock-in just as if they were in the office.

Boost employee morale and productivity with prompt time-off requests

- An important aspect of maintaining a satisfied workforce is prompt handling of time-off requests. Employees may find it difficult to fully focus if they are waiting extensively for approval of a vacation or day to take their child to the doctor.
- Attendance tracking makes it easier to review and approve planned absences. Employees are relieved without the uncertainty of planning personal time away from the job. The work environment benefits because employees are happier and more productive.

FEATURES

Better employee attendance tracking helps to reduce absenteeism.

- Excessive employee absences can have a huge impact on an organization. Managing and controlling absenteeism determines how much that impact will affect costs. A solution is recording absences so line managers and payroll are aware of this potential problem.
- Recorded absences clears up any discrepancies and allows management to use the information. Unusual absenteeism levels are highlighted and addressed quickly. Otherwise, inaccurate or incomplete records makes it difficult to keep track of when, and how often, employees miss work.

Eliminate the bottleneck of one person entering data for the entire staff.

Streamlining employee attendance tracking within a software system removes the often cumbersome task of one person entering time for an entire company. Even with less than 10 people, a self-service option for time and attendance tracking improves the flow and accuracy of data. Not only can employees keep track of their daily work hours, but they can also see how much time off they have accrued or used.

Employee attendance tracking provides proof for a wage and hour audit or lawsuit.

Most employers do not worry about a lawsuit or audit until they receive notification of a pending action. It is best to be prepared for the unexpected. Practicing accurate attendance tracking of employee hours and time off will support the employer's argument against a claim. Otherwise, courts will defer to the attendance records of the employee.

Attendance tracking makes it easier to schedule vacations.

- Even the most loyal and productive employee enjoys vacation time. Having a centralized place where vacation schedules are posted simplifies the process of ensuring employees get their preferred dates. This also gives managers advanced notice so they can prepare for planned absences.
- In addition, tracking attendance makes it easier for managers to monitor the amount of vacation time each employee takes.
- Employee attendance tracking is a basic function that provides many benefits to an organization. Managing it properly assists employees with being more accountable for their time and provides essential data for making business decisions.

FEATURES

Proofing

Speed up the files and documents review process, bring clarity in feedback sharing and even keep track of changes made in them.

Task management.

Keep work organized so that people don't have to wonder what they have to work on next and what's pending.

Provides Real-Time Updates

Do your employees often disappear during work hours and cannot be contacted in any manner? Are you having difficulties with quality control?

Unless you get real-time updates, the tracking system will be futile. You should get live updates on an employee's location as and when you desire during work hours. If you can track the movement of the user, then you will be able to figure out his or her work progress.

With the help of the GPS, find out the exact location of an employee. Evaluate your employee's productivity no matter where he is from the comfort of your own office. You can even zoom in and out of the map for accuracy.

Single View Platform

Running a company is difficult - you would have hundreds of employees doing your bidding every single day. While the GPS tracking feature will help you track their physical location, it's not really a great idea to keep changing your screen, right?

Look for an employee location tracking system that will let you check the location of all your employees in just one single view. You can track the direction they are heading in as well. With this feature, you will be able to manage your entire team with no hassle
