It is important to fill out the three food diaries as accurately as possible for 72-hours (3 days), as a more detailed diary will allow for a more accurate nutritional analysis. It is best to record your meals, snacks, and drinks soon after consuming them as it can be easy to forget after a long day. Additionally, it is important to include amounts and serving sizes (e.g. a cup, tablespoon, handful, size of a deck of cards, ounces, etc.) as well as brand names and restaurant names – the more descriptive the better! If a dish contains many ingredients be sure to include all of the ingredients and an estimated amount of each consumed (e.g. chicken broccoli alfredo: 4 oz linguine, $\frac{3}{4}$ c alfredo sauce, $\frac{1}{2}$ c broccoli, 4 oz grilled chicken).

Please feel free to also write down other comments and descriptions of how you felt at the time you were eating, what you were doing, or who you were with. This can help the nutritionist to obtain a more complete picture of your overall diet.

On the back of this page you will find a sample food diary, but keep in mind that it is only an example and that your diary will look different.
