Brief Non-Disclosure Agreement - Effective Immediately

Click Labs will hold in strictest confidence, and will not use or disclose to any third party, any client confidential information submitted through our website via any and all contact forms. The term "client confidential information" means all non-public information that you designate as being confidential, or which under the circumstances of disclosure, ought to be treated as confidential.

Unless otherwise agreed on by both parties, "client confidential information" includes any information, images, designs, or other type of content either written or uploaded to our website's contact forms. This includes, but is not limited to: business plans or ideas, invention features, personal contact information, proprietary rights, specifications, or other related information received from others that you are obligated to treat as confidential.

If Click Labs has any questions as to what constitutes client confidential information, we will consult with you directly. The only thing client confidential information does not include is information that, through no fault or breach of Click Labs or any third party: (a) was known prior to your disclosure to Click Labs; or (b) becomes publicly available through your announcement a third party's.
