

Summit Proposal : Entry # 113Personal Information*Name_Presentor_1

William "Bud" Deihl Deihl

Job Title

Educational Technology Consultant

Email_Presentor_1

wdeihl@vcu.edu

Daytime Phone

(804)828-4383

Institution_Presentor_1

Virginia Commonwealth University

Proposal InformationProposal Title

Online Video Editing with WeVideo

Abstract

Empowering faculty or students with free, easy to use video editing is the key to incorporating digital storytelling into educational practice. This session will provide those with laptops and a free WeVideo account to experience simple editing with this online tool.

Proposed Session:

This session overview will provide faculty participants with the opportunity to do some simple editing with the WeVideo online editor. Get a sense of how one might be able to employ digital storytelling in your own instructional context. It will provide a quick overview of the editing environment, show how the editor can be used by individuals with no prior video editing experience or set to more advanced capabilities for those who choose to work with more advanced tools.

Telling stories with the addition of images and sounds allows the narrative to take on new dimension and the storyteller to economize on the use of words. Twenty first century storytellers are able use digital technologies to create and distribute short and powerful multimedia stories to any location throughout the world, with the most popular means of distribution, being the Internet.

Join this session to for a hands-on introduction to WeVideo and consider how digital storytelling might enhance your practice, increase student engagement and improve learning.

Participants who want to engage in hands-on work should bring their laptop and are encouraged to set up a free account at <http://wevideo.com>

Preferred Session Format

Interactive Presentation - Wednesday

Session Tracks

- Open Educational Resources

Target Audience

Join this session to see if you might like to explore WeVideo and digital storytelling for use in your practice.