Time Frame 60-120 session(s)

Essential Question(s)

- What characteristics make a a good essay?

Summary

Students engage in activities that explore the characteristics of good college admission/scholarship essays. Then, using the list generated, they create a personal outline for a college admissions essay.

Learning Goals

- Students will identify good characteristics of college admission/scholarship essays.
- Students will write a personal outline for a college admissions essay.

Engage

Teacher's Note

There is a short PowerPoint that mirrors this activity. It can be used to help keep students on task and goal-focused throughout all activities. Also, note that all of the essays and templates may be modified to meet the needs, experiences, and interests of your students. Start with the title slide to introduce the topic "College Admissions Essay: It's not just what you say but how you say it."

Change to slide two.

Ask students to first think about what characteristics are needed to create a good essay. Have them write "What are the characteristics of a well-written college admissions/scholarship essay?" at the top of their page then jot down their ideas on that paper.

Teacher's Note

Students will keep this paper as a reference throughout the "Writing College Essay" activity, recording all ideas which might be used later to write a good essay.

Explore

Change to slide three.

Next, give each student a copy of both "College Essay 1" and "College Essay 2" to read individually. (Note: These essays are good examples, and the students should be made aware of this before they start reading). As students read, instruct them to highlight or annotate sections that make these essays good examples of what a college essay might look like. This Why-Lighting strategy will help them quickly refer back to the good qualities they noticed.

After reading the example essays, students will add characteristics that they noted to their original list.

Possible Characteristics

Focus on the prompt, economy of language, or humor.

Explain

Change to slide 4. Have students get with a partner to share the lists they've created and add to their lists, based on what their partner shares.

(Click the slide) Student pairs will then get with another student pair (creating a group/team of four) to share their lists. Again, they will add to their personal lists based on what their group shares.

Change to slide 5, "Brainstorm Relay."

Then, using the lists they've created, the groups will have a Brainstorm Relay. As the teacher creates a master list, groups take turns offering items from their lists until they run out of ideas; no repeats! The group with the most items wins.

Teacher Note

The teacher should write Group1, Group 2, etc. (as many as is needed) on the board. When a group shares out from their list, the teacher should write their answer under their group heading to keep a tally of which group has shared what and which group shared the most answers.

After the master lists are completed, display the feedback from the exemplar essays shown in slide 6. After reading the feedback for essay 1, have students look back at the essay for examples of cohesive structure, elegant style (what does that even mean?), details, and specificity. Have a short, whole-class discussion about what they find.

Teacher's Note

The "Teacher's Guide for College Essay 1 and 2" (located under attachments) contains specific examples found in each essay.

Next, display the feedback for essay 2 shown on slide 7. Have students look back at the essay and discuss how the author shows, rather than tells, the reader what he is passionate about. Have a short, whole-class discussion about what they find.

Teachers should explicitly explain to students that anything they learned from the feedback to the essays should be added to their lists. Explain to students that they will use the master lists they've created, as well as the feedback examples, during the next activity as they begin composing their own personal college scholarship/admissions essays.

Extend

While showing slide eight, have students choose one the following three common college admission prompts:

- Describe an influential person in your life.
- Discuss an activity outside of the classroom.
- Discuss an issue that is important to you.

After students choose a prompt, change to the final slide. Have them use the "Essay Outline" handout to create a draft similar to the "Essay Outline Example" provided. The outlines should be informed by the list they compiled during this session as well as the template they may have filled out.

Teacher's Note

If students are struggling to create an outline for their topic, have them complete an essay template ("Essay Template - Issue of Importance," "Essay Template - Activity Outside of the Classroom," or "Essay Template - Influential Person") that matches their chosen topic. These templates are meant to foster ideas for students struggling with their essay, and to help all students create an outline for their final essay.

Warning!!!

Please make sure students know that if they rely heavily on these templates in their final draft, they will write one of the worst admissions essays possible. They should only use these templates to get their own creative juices flowing.

Evaluate

After students have finished their outline, have them share with a critical friend, time permitting. Otherwise, the outline can serve as a formative assessment for the teacher.

Follow-up Activities

Students will use these outlines to guide and inform their college admissions/scholarship essays. Before any student essay is submitted to a college or scholarship, teachers should follow up with students, encouraging them to find a critical friend to peer review and suggest edits before submission. Students should also be encouraged to find a teacher or adult who might be able to read and provide feedback to any edited peer reviewed essay. Once these reviews and edits are complete, students may submit their essays to colleges or scholarships.

Research Rationale

Students who attend college after graduation and complete a four-year degree enjoy greater job satisfaction and better quality of life post-graduation, and college graduates have significantly better opportunities for upward career mobility and earning a living wage (Okerson, 2016). College readiness is a process, not a program. The reasons students do not matriculate to college are many and varied (King, 2012). To mitigate the college-going gap, high school students need both support and assistance in preparing for and attending college (Radcliffe & Bos, 2013; King, 2012; Sherwin, 2012). College admission processes are complex. Many students have no idea where to begin. King (2012) and Sherwin (2012) both notice students' need for appropriate steps and guidance to make sense of college entrance. Applying for financial aid and scholarships, navigating college admission requirement, participating in ACT and SAT workshops, writing the college admission essay, and securing needed recommendations are all college processes that often hamper students in securing admission. Alvarado and An (2015), Belasco (2012), and King (2012) all found that minority students, first-generation college applicants, and students whose families have low socioeconomic status (SES) rely more heavily on their schools for guidance. Therefore by providing students an intentional opportunity to understand the necessity of college essays and how to write them, will help create a college-going culture within the school and establish clear expectations that all students have the ability and opportunity to attend college.
