For example, if you're using a daily work schedule template, you can edit it by adding or removing employees or shifts as per your need. Further, if a new member joins your company, you can easily customize the template based on other employees working on the same shift. Clearly, hourly schedule templates are useful. However, they have many shortcomings. 3 major drawbacks of using an hourly schedule template Schedule templates are ideal for creating a quick work schedule for your team members. But they suffer from several limitations, such as: 1. Prone to time manipulation Since you don't have any control over how your employees are using their time during work hours, an employee schedule template can be manipulated by entering falsified data, i.e., time theft. For example, if an employee has underworked on a task, they may try to enter false time information. This can lead to serious consequences in the long run for your organization. For instance, if you pay your employees on an hourly basis, this time manipulation can result in excessive payments to your employees. cloud computing security issues and solutions pdf 2. Lack of extensive productivity reports An hourly schedule template will only give you access to time spent by employees on daily tasks and projects during the shift. It doesn't give you any insights into their productivity or if they were actually working on the task during those periods. For example, you will not know whether your employees are working on assigned tasks or spending their valuable work time on social media. 3. Not scalable Hourly schedule templates will do the job if you have a small team. However, if you're thinking of expanding your company to multiple locations, it can seriously hinder your company's growth. Your supervisors and managers will have to spend a great deal of time tracking and arranging template data, generating schedule reports, and other mundane activities. This may result in your employee's valuable time and energy being wasted, harming your profit margin. Considering the above factors, it's not advisable to use daily, weekly, or monthly planner templates to manage your employee schedule. So, how do you manage your employees' schedules effectively? An alternative to schedule templates: Time Doctor Hourly schedule templates are popular among many small and large companies. However, the lack of time tracking options and the potential for inaccurate entries make them ineffective for commercial use. Fortunately, you can use an alternative like Time Doctor to track employee work hours. tpg pantone book pdf What's Time Doctor? Time Doctor is a powerful employee time tracking and performance management tool. It's used by major companies, like Ericsson and Keller Williams, as well as small businesses, like Thrive Market, to improve employee productivity. You can use it to track the work hours of your employees, making it suitable for both in-office and remote teams. Key features Let's take a look at some of Time Doctor's key features: 1. Time tracking Time Doctor offers two types of time tracking methods — automatic and interactive. In the automatic time tracking mode, Time Doctor offers a silent version that tracks time silently in the background. The app will not have any effect on the employee's day-to-day work and allows them to work without interruption. In the interactive mode, your employees can start the timer on their own when they start working on a particular task and stop when the task is finished or to take a break. 2. Idle time tracking The idle time tracking feature allows you to check whether your employees are idle while working on a task or project. If an employee does not engage in any keyboard, mouse, or computer activity for some time, Time Doctor automatically sends a pop-up notification. The pop-up alerts the employees and reminds them gently to focus on the task at hand. Note: Time Doctor isn't a keystroke logger. It will only check if an employee pressed any keys or mouse buttons to calculate idle time. 3. Extensive productivity reports Time Doctor allows you to access comprehensive real-time reports to understand employee performance. These reports include: Attendance report: The report helps you to show whether an employee is absent, partially absent, present, or late.Hours tracked report: This report gives you access to how much your employees worked on any particular day, week, or any other date range you select.Timeline report: The timeline report lets you examine how much time your employee spends working daily or weekly.Projects and tasks report: Check your employee's activity on any task or project.Web and app usage report: Get a detailed report of the time spent by your employees on different websites and applications.Activity summary report: View the active minutes, seconds, unproductive, and mobile time of each employee. As a result, Time Doctor provides an accurate timesheet for each employee, logging in their hours on individual projects and tasks. 4. Productivity ratings This feature lets you set different productivity ratings for various sites, depending on how relevant it's for your employee's work. The different productivity ratings are: Productive.Unproductive.Neutral.Unrated.
